COURSE DESCRIPTION: To introduce students to the concepts and methods associated with modern project management as widely practiced across a wide variety of industries and other concerns. This course will provide instruction in project management practices related to the defining, planning, executing, and delivering of project outputs. The primary course of instruction will revolve around topics broadly outlined in the Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK). The project management discipline is becoming an increasingly sought-after skill set in the corporate world, and those who possess a good working knowledge of it will be valued greatly as, increasingly, scarce resources require even greater management to achieve objectives.
